

This number represents the number of individual users who have questioned the origin of the post. Be careful. A post with high idea tokens matched by equally high concerns may reflect an unpopular idea.

This number represents the number of staked idea tokens to the post. It does not include the original tokens spent by the poster. To see precise distribution of the tokens, click “see details.”

I don't like that idea. We should instead come together to fund a new platform like this one!

Upon opening X/Twitter, one shouldn't be surprised to see its owner's posts at the forefront of the website - consistently. But is this deadness to large companies' domination of social spheres a necessity? We must rise up so that my "For You" page isn't cluttered with people with whom I have no interest to associate myself!
